Formation

A six-ship KC-135 Stratotanker formation demonstrates the 100th Air Refueling Wing's quick-response capability Jan. 23 as part of a training exercise at Mildenhall Royal Air Station, England. The 100th ARW maintains the only U.S. Air Force air-refueling assets based in Europe. Wing airmen are responsible for covering more than 20 million square miles and 93 countries in the European theater.

New TRICARE standards

People covered by the TRICARE Standard military health care plan no longer need approval from their military treatment facility to seek inpatient care at civilian hospitals. The need to get a nonavailability statement before seeking civilian inpatient care expired Dec. 28 under a provision of the 2002 National Defense Authorization Act. A nonavailability statement indicates that care is not available from the military facility and authorizes care at a civilian facility.

8th MDG extends clinic hours

By Senior Airman Cat Trombley
8th Fighter Wing Public Affairs

The 8th Medical Group starts new hours of operation Monday to better offer Wolf Pack members access to care.

"The 8th Medical Group listened to the Wing leadership when they talked about extending hours for the night flying mission. We knew folks were working odd hours and might have trouble getting care during regular hours," said Lt. Col. Janet Deltuva, 8th Medical Operations Squadron commander.

"The majority of care at the clinic here is routine and outpatient in nature, so extending hours to 8 a.m. to 8 p.m. Monday through Friday and Saturdays 9 a.m. to noon will help more patients be seen for routine or acute appointments," she said.

According to Colonel Deltuva, a person needs to schedule a routine appointment when he has a medical concern that is not getting worse and not causing significant pain, but he feels he needs treatment. Examples are a rash, flu symptoms that are not clearing up after 48 hours or cold symptoms that are getting progressively worse.

An acute appointment is when a person needs to be seen within 24 hours. These appointments are often for an illness that would keep one from going to work, such as dehydration, diarrhea lasting more than a day, migraine headaches, suspected food poisoning or fever that will not go away after taking over the counter medications.

Although the clinic here is set up for primarily acute or routine appointments, Colonel Deltuva said urgent urgent care is also available.

"If a person feels they have an urgent medical need or an emergency in which they can 'walk-in,' such as active bleeding, an injury that keeps them from walking or they have just fallen and have severe pain, or faintness, they should come in during regular hours and will be evaluated for the urgency of their medical problem and seen as soon as appropriate. If an emergency is life threatening, such as, potential loss of a limb or function, severe bleeding or chest pain radiating down the arm, call 911 to request ambulance assistance," she said.

The colonel also said the staff at the medical group now works in two shifts to cover the extra time and has been doing so since Dec. 1, 2003.

"A patient who needs an acute or urgent appointment may not always see their primary care doctor, but they will be seen. The most important thing is that the level of care has not changed nor has the quality of care been compromised."

The new hours will be monitored for use and what best benefits the staff and patients.

"Over the course of the next few months, we will be evaluating the use of the extended duty hours and Saturday morning clinic. If the Wolf Pack does not require these extended services, we may look at a return to standard hours," she said.

Colonel Deltuva believes the changes in operation hours are the best option for the Wolf Pack.

"The reasons that originally prompted the 8th MDG to consider extended clinic hours caused us to rethink our processes and personnel utilization. Our solution to the problem appears to be a win/win situation both for our patients, by offering more access to routine care and more efficient medical services, and to our staff. Regardless of these changes, both present and future, we will always be focused on our primary mission — keeping the Wolf Pack 'Fit to Fight Tonight,'" Colonel Deltuva said.

Appointments can be scheduled by calling 782-4333.

Targeting pods bolster F-16 training

By Tech. Sgt. Gregory Ripps
149th Fighter Wing Public Affairs

LACKLAND AIR FORCE BASE, Texas — The 149th Fighter Wing received something Jan. 14 that will literally put its current class of F-16 fighter pilots right on target with their training.

The unit will be the first in the Air Force to graduate pilots from the F-16 Fighting Falcon basic course with targeting-pod training.

The enhanced training missions result from the wing receiving 10 Low-Altitude Navigation and Targeting Infrared for Night targeting pods. The pods attach to fighter aircraft and provide an infrared target display for the pilot to engage.

Besides an infrared sensor, each pod contains a laser designator-rangefinder for precise delivery of laser-guided munitions and software for automatic target tracking.

The 149th FW has been training Air Force pilots since the unit transferred to Air Education and Training Command in 1999. During their time with the unit, student pilots learn how to fly and fight with the F-16. Until now, however, they had to go to Luke Air Force Base, Ariz., for targeting-pod training.

“When they finish training with the wing, they’ll be ready for almost anything,” said Maj. Greg Whiting, one of the wing’s instructor pilots.

The targeting pods are the sensors that provide air attack footage commonly seen on the news, Major Whiting said.

“The video shows cross hairs on a target — bunkers, buildings, etc.,” he said. “The ensuing explosion is the detonation of the munitions that followed that laser spot onto that target.”

The class of nine student pilots who began training with the wing Aug. 18 is scheduled to begin training with the targeting pods in February following their training to drop ordnance the conventional way.

Major Whiting said the Air Force now regularly deploys with both the targeting pods and night-vision goggles.

“Precision-guided bombs are the way the Air Force has gone and will continue to fight,” Major Whiting said.

The wing’s quest to provide the targeting-pod training began about four years ago. The unit borrowed some targeting pods from Air National Guard units in Albuquerque, N.M., and Tulsa, Okla.

A handful of 149th FW pilots already knew how to use the pods from their stints on active duty. They taught some of the instructor pilots how to use them, and they, in turn, taught the rest. After the IPs learned how to teach using the targeting pods, they developed a new syllabus for the basic course to include the targeting-pod training. The unit then obtained approval for the revised syllabus from AETC officials.

reworking a syllabus when it introduced night-vision goggle training into the basic course in 2001.

“NVGs taught us how to use the syllabus and to work with AETC to change it,” said Col. Joe Lengyel, wing vice commander. “We already had the process down.”

The syllabus change adds only two days to the training schedule. However, handling the pods required the unit to obtain certain licenses and permits, and maintainers had to learn new procedures and undergo special training.

Student pilots said they are looking forward to the training.

“We all feel lucky to be here,” said 1st Lt. Greg Jenkins, a student pilot from Montana last assigned to Sheppard AFB, Texas. “The instructor pilots have a huge amount of experience, the facilities are incredible and the aircraft is really good.”

Nineteen full-time and nine traditional Guard instructor pilots from the 149th FW teach the basic course with the help of two instructors attached from 19th Air Force and six civilian contractors who teach most of the course academics.

An Airman from the 8th Services Squadron received Article 15 punishment for failure to go and dereliction of duty, a violation of Articles 86 and 92, UCMJ. The Airman failed to sign out on the squadron sign out log prior to departing Kunsan Air Base and failed to report to a mandatory formation. The commander imposed punishment consisting of suspended reduction to the rank of airman basic, and restriction to the limits of Kunsan Air Base for 30 days with curfew.

A Staff Sergeant from the 8th Fighter Wing received Article 15 punishment for simple assault, a violation of Article 128, UCMJ. The commander imposed punishment consisting of suspended reduction to the rank of senior airman, and 14 days extra duty.

8th FW Manpower: Here to serve

People often ask what is manpower and how can it help them.

Manpower management professionals play an integral role in helping today's leaders effectively manage their manpower resources. The 8th Fighter Wing Manpower Office, in building 755, room 321, is dedicated to this purpose.

As stated in the Promotion Fitness Examination Study Guide, ... "effective manpower management is critical to mission accomplishment. The manpower management process systematically identifies the minimum-essential manpower required to accomplish approved missions."

The Unit Manpower Document is the main product of this resource determination process and is the baseline for leadership decisions involving manpower.

"Our goal in manpower is to provide a streamlined organizational structure to transition from peace to war easily," said Master Sgt. Pete Speen, 8th Fighter Wing Manpower superintendent.

"It is paramount for all supervisors and managers to understand how billets are earned. Today we are at a fiscal crossroad and must be sure to use our resources responsibly," he said.

Although resource determination and management is the primary function of manpower, the Air Force Innovative Development through Employee Awareness Program, Performance Measures Program, Productivity Programs, and Wartime Manpower Program, to name a few, also fall under manpower management.

Another popular area under "Products and Guides" is the "Authorization Change Request." ACRs are accomplished by units requesting a change to their unit manpower document, primarily due to changes in mission requirements. All ACRs need to be approved and signed by the lowest level commander having control over the authorization before it is sent via e-mail to the manpower office.

How many times is it said in your work area, "Hey, that's a great idea?" Well, the Air Force IDEA Program was designed to solicit ideas from Air Force members, military and civilian, to make the Air Force a better place. According to Air Force Publishing Directive 38-4, Manpower and Organization, the IDEA Program "encourages creative thinking and makes innovative ideas (especially those fostering continuous process improvement, economies, and productivity) available to benefit the Air Force." If approved, Air Force members may be eligible for an award ranging from receipt of an IDEA certificate to accepting the maximum award of $10,000. Last year over $2,000 was paid to Wolf Pack members for approved IDEAs.

The Performance Measures Program is a vital avenue for squadron, group, and wing commanders to report Pacific Air Forces-mandated measurement areas to the PACAF commander and help measure wing performance. Through this program, specific processes are quantified and tracked to ensure commanders are kept abreast of key elements indicating the health of base and PACAF programs.

Air Force Productivity Programs cross a full spectrum of activities. Productivity Enhancing Capital Investment Programs include the Fast Payback Capital Investment Program and the Productivity Investment Fund Program. Anyone may submit a FAS-CAP or PIF, involving equipment or facilities, improving government service, products, quality, or timeliness. These programs are paid for by PACAF as long as they show enough savings to cover the cost. Approved projects may even be eligible for the IDEA Program.

The Wartime Manpower Program involves everything from Unit Type Code review to building the wartime equivalent of the UMD, the Deployed Requirements/Manning Document, for units that are deploying to a forward-based location. Status of Resources and Training System manpower reviews are instrumental for assisting commanders in determining their unit's ability to provide appropriate manpower and associated skill levels to execute base and deployable war plans.

The 8th Fighter Wing Manpower Office stands ready to help with any and all manpower management needs.

"I encourage the Wolf Pack to come visit our office and together we will 'defend the base, accept follow-on forces, and take the fight north.' Please stop by, visit our web page, or call us at 782-5535. We're here to serve you," Sergeant Speen said.

Assistance for these programs can be found on the Kunsan home page at <https://web.kunsan.af.mil> under the 8th Fighter Wing, Manpower and Organization link.

Get involved with something

By Master Sgt. John Pupo
8th Fighter Wing Career Assistance Advisor

Involvement, what does it really mean? According to Webster’s Dictionary, it means, “to engage as a participant.” But what does this have to do with the military?

I believe getting involved with different things will help you grow into a better overall person regardless of your rank or stature. There are so many things the military offers us at each and every location we are at. Since we are stationed at Kunsan Air Base, let me focus on what this base has to get us involved. We have a lot of professional organizations to get involved with.

Some examples are Air Force Sergeant Association that is open to all enlisted ranks and lobbies for the men and women of the military for better pay, quality of life issue and much more.

The Airmen Advisory Council networks with airmen on their issues such as dormitory concerns. Those are then voiced to the wing leaders so they may be heard; after all, there are a lot of airman on base who are living in trying conditions compared to the rest of us.

How about the Focus 5/6 for our mid tier NCO? They do more than they realize for us here. They are always looking for ways to learn more about the enlisted profession and mentor folks below them.

Last but not least we have the Top 3 Council and Company Grade Officer Council that provides the over all guidance and experience to these professional organization as well as offering professional development courses to all ranks and are associated with local community activities.

OK, what about the personal side of getting involved? How about the Sonlight Inn, chapel, services squadron, and all the great things they provide to the local community and us. I have been stationed at nine different bases and in my opinion, you will not find another installation that offers as much free food and fellowship than here.

The local orphanage is another great way to get involved and to help others that are not so fortunate. All of these things really don’t take too much of your time and the rewards are great.

Lastly, what about this country? I find it really funny when I talk to folks here and they say, “I don’t like Korea.” I ask why, and the majority of the responses I get are “because there is nothing here for me to do.” Of course you can image my next question, “What have you done since your arrival?” The response is all too familiar; if it is not Osan then it is America Town. Well, we all know about these two places, and they really should not be not thought of as Korea. Get out and see the real Korea, enjoy the food, sights and the culture. Who knows, you might make a life-long friendship with one of the local nationals, which will help you enjoy your time and cherish each moment spent in this country.

No matter what your rank is, by getting involved with something while you are here, your time will be well spent. So get out of the dorms, get involved, and really see Korea the way that I see it.

Smoking policy

Q I was briefed recently we could not have smoking materials in our garbage cans in the dorms. As a smoker, I don’t smoke in my room, but I do have stripped cigarettes in my pockets because I do not want to throw them on the ground. I try to uphold community standards and police the base by picking up an occasional cigarette butt, but some times the nearest butt can is no where to be found. I just wanted to get the Wolf Pack’s view on this subject.

A I’d like to thank you for taking to heart our no smoking policy within the dorms, along with your efforts to keep Kunsan looking good by helping pick up cigarette butts and other trash. Good on you!

In order to effectively enforce the no smoking policy, it’s important all smoking materials be disposed of properly. Designated smoking areas are established for all dormitories. Per our 8th Fighter Wing Instruction 32-2001, Fire Protection and Prevention Program, paragraph 3.9.2, “All smoking material will be disposed of in noncombustible cans with self closing lids,” which means the butt cans placed in smoking areas. Your best bet is to dispose of your field-stripped cigarette butts in the cans placed outside your dorm as you come home.

Members are authorized to have cigarettes, lighters, etc., in their rooms, but they are not allowed to smoke in their rooms. During fire drills, the fire protection flight is on the lookout for any indications of smoking within the dorm rooms, i.e., a very strong odor of smoke, used ash trays, and smoking material in the trash. The 8th Civil Engineer Squadron identifies those rooms to their respective commanders. It’s left up to the commanders to determine if the member was actually smoking in his or her room.

Barriers

Q Sir, those three concrete obstacles recently placed at the intersection of laundromat road and the road parallel to the runway were a good idea. I have certainly been concerned about the safety of the people jogging on the parallel road in the morning. Still, have you noticed that in order to turn onto the parallel road from the laundromat road you have to pause in the oncoming lane of traffic? That last barrier — the one nearest the intersection — prevents the vehicle which traverses the obstacles in the direction of that intersection from re-entering its normal lane of traffic. Could it be moved? Maybe shuffle all three about five yards back from the intersection.

A Thanks for your observation and recommendation. The barriers were placed there for flightline security reasons, but the additional protection for joggers is a plus we hadn’t considered.

The barriers were strategically placed in their current configuration to stop a heavy vehicle speeding toward the flightline, which is why there are two lines on each side of the road. The spacing is exact to allow 18-wheelers, snow plows, fire trucks and even Patriot vehicles to pass, so we’re happy with the placement. Your concern with stopping in the on-coming lane is valid, but because visibility is unobstructed at the intersection, it actually works out better. Traffic turning onto 5th Street from either direction off of A Street must actually hold until a vehicle in the serpentine clears. If there was room for a vehicle to make the turn and stop, the two vehicles meeting would have to maneuver past each other. Security forces and the civil engineer squadron are watching the intersection, and so far, we’ve had no accidents or even near misses we’re aware of.

Additionally, we have also been asked why we didn’t just place the barriers on the taxiway on the flightline side of the road. We couldn’t do so because if we blocked off the taxiway, and responding emergency vehicles couldn’t get in. Most importantly, if we set up a serpentine, any barriers on the taxiway would pose a potential air field obstruction.

Thanks again for your concern and for taking time to write to make the Wolf Pack better.

GAS MASK: Staff Sgt. Dennis Price, 8th Civil Engineer Squadron, helps an airman inspect his gas mask recently during a nuclear, biological and chemical agent class. Sergeant Price was chosen by the Top 3 council for the December Most Valuable Player award. He is responsible for $8 million of response equipment for installation disaster preparedness, nuclear, biological, and chemical defense warfare and hazardous material awareness equipment. Sergeant Price received an MVP Award certificate, $25 Army Air Force Exchange Service gift certificate and a Top 3 coin. The MVP award is a monthly award created by the Top 3 council to recognize an enlisted member — technical sergeant and below — from the 8th Fighter Wing who goes the extra mile by accomplishing tasks that would otherwise go unnoticed, be it on or off duty.

Best thing you've done at Kunsan: Enhance my supervision and mentoring skills

Tech. Sgt.
Tawanza Smith

"Tech. Sgt. Smith has been stationed at Kunsan for approximately nine months. Since her arrival, she has become the most valuable player of the commander's support staff. She has brilliantly led two airmen in tackling a diverse array of personnel issues for the more than 250 military members of the 8th Civil Engineer Squadron. She responded superbly when tasked to get long neglected programs back within Air Force standards. Her hands-on oversight of our physical health assessment program reduced the missed appointment rate from 20 to 3 percent — best decrease on Kunsan. Sergeant Smith was recognized as the 8th Fighter Wing's Personnel Manager of the Year for 2003. Finally, she sacrificed her personal time to attend the wing's enlisted career seminar to further enhance her own professional development. She served as a member of Kunsan's beach clean up crew that restored over 2.5 miles of shoreline to its natural habitat. She also spent off-duty time to assist with the Air Force Sergeant Association membership and bone marrow drives. With energy to spare, she supported the wing's Native American Indian Observance by helping to set up and cook for the event. I am constantly amazed with the quality and quantity of work this NCO produces."

February is Black History Month

By Senior Airman Cat Trombley
8th Fighter Wing Public Affairs

Black History month was originally designated as Negro History Week in 1926 by Dr. Carter G. Woodson to coincide with Frederick Douglass' (pictured) and Abraham Lincoln's birthdays. It pays tribute to blacks who have contributed to American History and shows how their various contributions helped make America what it is today.

At Kunsan, the Black History Council has many events planned through February for the Wolf Pack. The theme for this year is "Brown v. the Board of Education Topeka, Kan." This year marks the 50th anniversary of the court decision that said "separate but equal" schools was unconstitutional.

"The African American Heritage Committee will not only focus on this ruling but also the Civil Rights Movement, the arts, and a cooking class will be offered," said 1st Lt. Camika Lopez, 8th Logistics Readiness Squadron and president of the council.

The committee has planned events, such as the big kick off Tuesday 1 p.m. in the base theater.

"The opening ceremony will include debates, music, monologues all with a focus on history. There will be singing, some acting, all to help educate Wolf Pack members on history. Not African American history, just history," said Tech. Sgt. Lethia Fowler, 8th Fighter Wing Military Equal Opportunity Office.

Following the opening ceremony, the committee will host more events through the month. A cooking class will be held with the Friday night meal and movie Feb. 27 at the Sonlight Inn. Both will have African-American influence.

An African American Gala will be held Feb. 21 at 6 p.m. at the Loring Club.

"The gala is like a fancy dance. Everyone dresses up and cuts loose. It will be like a dinner theater, the theme for the night is 'We've come this far,'" Sergeant Fowler said.

Another event planned is a round table discussion Feb. 24 at 6 p.m. at the Sonlight Inn.

"The round table is a dialog between officers and enlisted on topics specific to African-Americans," Sergeant Fowler said.

Lieutenant Lopez believes it important to recognize the role African Americans have played in history.

"It helps to not only celebrate contributions of African Americans but it also helps to tell Americans the struggle and triumph of this race and how they have overcome so much to live the American dream of freedom and equal rights for all. Its important of celebrate of this month, to reflect on the past in order not to repeat it and to learn from it," Lieutenant Lopez said.

GOLF: Bob Thomas, 8th Fighter Wing director of staff and local golf guru, teaches a class on golf etiquette, Saturday at Mulligan's Pub. Colonel Thomas was the Air Combat Command golf team captain from 2000 to 2003. He taught the 15 attendants what is appropriate behavior on a golf course, for example, a golfer must ask to play through. The next golf etiquette class will be held in the spring.

Ready, set, go

By 1st Lt. Wayne Stiles
8th Services Squadron

The fitness center will unveil a new incentive program called “The Great Race” Sunday.

With winter upon us, many people are forced to work out inside due to the icy conditions and cold temperatures. With the new program comes a challenge to Wolf Pack members, do five cardiovascular workouts a week for 30 minutes a session. There are five machines you can use to finish the race. They are the bicycle, treadmill, elliptical, stairmaster and row machines.

The idea is to try and get people to use different machines. Too often, we get stagnant from doing the same routine every day. By trying a new machine it can help you overcome the boredom and grind of coming to the gym. Each machine challenges your muscle groups in its own way.

This is not a race where someone takes home a prize for winning, but a race where everyone wins when they finish the task at hand. The following must be done to finish the race.

The first task for Wolf Pack members is the bicycle. Wolf Pack members can choose to cycle inside or outside, but we challenge you to competing 600 minutes on the bicycle. Spinning classes do count.

The second task at hand is the treadmill. Again, you may choose to run, or walk, inside or outside, but we challenge you to complete 500 minutes.

The third challenge is one you can only do in the fitness center. We challenge you to do 400 minutes of exercise time on the elliptical machine.

The stair climber is the next thing on the list. We challenge you to 300 minutes of work out time using this machine.

Last but not least, is the row machine. This one requires the least amount of time, only 200 minutes.

For your workouts to count, you must be entered in the FitLinxx when you first walk through the fitness center doors. When you accomplish a task, come get a fitness center staff member and he will verify your accomplishment by pulling up your workout. Those that finish all five tasks will receive a T-shirt for their accomplishment. Mix it up a bit, don't get bored.
